Some say covered bridges were built because horses balked at crossing an open trestle over water. Others maintain that wooden bridges were covered to protect their structural timbers from the elements. And romantics argue that these bridges were constructed as havens for discreetly kissing couples on long buggy rides home from church.

But here's something few can dispute: the fact that covered bridges—many erected over 150 years ago—are still in service today is testimony to the visionary designers and the New England craftsmanship with which they were built. They have made a lasting impression on our landscape.

At Cambridge Trust Company of New Hampshire, our team of investment and trust professionals have the vision and tools to help you build a bridge to a more secure future. We provide our clients with integrated financial plans that are flexible enough to withstand both the changing investment climate and shifting financial priorities, and disciplined enough to cover life's inevitable surprises. And with our "small bank" attention to personal service and integrity, it's no surprise that more and more New Hampshire residents consider us part of the landscape too!
